Nero, a Full Sized 15-Year-Old African Specimen, Escapes From the Winter Quarters of the Washburne Circus, Near Bound Brook.

A lion hunt in the woods, participated in by scores of circus employees and farmers, kept the country side between Bound Brook and New Brunswick, N. J., at high pressure of excitement to-day.

Edward H. Radel, the New Brunswick trolley magnate, who had the advantage of other hunters because he utilized an automobile in the chase, got the first shot at the lion on the Raritan River road, near Riverside Park.

Then the hunters closed in and by the time they got through convincing themselves that the beast was dead he had several pounds of bullets and birdshot in his carcass.
